

This week was the fifth week of my internship. As usual, I engaged in making iOS application and learn how to analyze the data at the same time. Honestly, I feel some sort of limitation of my programming skill because there is no supervisor of programmer in my workplace. However, I keep trying to learn from the website and some books. Although it is quite tough work, I will continue this work as a long intern even after go back to Japan so I will improve skills more at here.

Things that I generally knew this week was how to manage people in start-up company. Although company has a good founder, it doesn't work well if team is not willing to follow the manager. I realized how difficult to take leadership in one company and this is what I have to learn for my future career.
